Preventing Falls and Workplace Injuries

Let's review a real-life workplace accident that happened right here in Southwestern Ontario.

A worker lost their life after falling from a stepladder that wasn't the right height for the task.

The employer was fined $125,000, but beyond that, they also faced increased WSIB costs, lost productivity, and time spent dealing with the investigation. More importantly, a life was lost—something no fine or corrective action can undo.

What Went Wrong?

- The worker used a stepladder that was too short for the job.
- They were working alone with no one nearby to assist.
- A safer option, like a properly designed platform or ladder, wasn't used.
